> 'Twas the month of June, In the year seventy-one, The knights of the quill, When their day's work was done, Set out on a journey,

Say eighty or more, To hold a Convention On the Rock Island shore. Twas a nice little trip, For the weary and sad

Who had worked many months To make every heart glad; And when they set foot In the Harrer House door, There was all heart could wish, For five hundred or more.

Twas a welcome so sweet, Where the hearts of the old And the young tried to greet, The careworn brother Who had wandered away. To pluck the bright flowers From the biossoms of May. Shall we tell all the story,

Twas a welcome so grand,

Or stop to relate, The seemes that transpired-While our kind readers wait : Or shall we just mention Tust our "Myra" was there, With he, sweetest of poems To waft on the air.

The latch string was out Wherever we wont, No money was asked for, No money was spent, While the music was sweet As the pure air above, And the cannons sent out Their strong message of love.

With mr "Grigge" at the helm And Mosser by his side, The old "New Boston" Rode out on the tide. While the parting words echoed From shore unto shore And the heart of Rock Island Wanted still to do more.

And then, such a night, Twas charming indeed, No musquitoes to bite, No () bed bugs to bleed. While the betters of Stoughton, Not our preacher so grave-The came of James 8-Carried down to the wave.

Twas the only mishap That occurred on that day, Though our "Doree" was thought To be, paving the way : To join on the stage, The "Ninteenth Century"

With the Present Age.

Oh, yes-we forget That our Musser's mishap Caused a dear little wife To remember the chap, Who sent from the "Harper" Her trunk, the wrong way, With all her best clothing The whole week to stay. I was well it was Mosser, For who else was there, To bear up so meekly Wish trouble and care, As the dear little wife,

Mrs. Mosser, by name, Who could never forget To be, always the same. The "New Boston" gave up its most precious load, And the people of Quincy Met them all on the road, And then, such a welcome, We hardly can tell, How the good people there Could manage so well.

Twas a day well spent In a beautiful town, Where the go-ahead people Do up everything brown, And all were invited, To partake of the least And come back again, From the north, south or east

And then to Peorla, We good people strayed, Expecting to find there A new capitol, made; As "wandering Bohamians" Are wont to search out, The new things from old, When trundled about.

A grand exhibition Was brought to us, there We looked on in wonder, Perhaps with a stare, While we sat at their board And partook of the feast, And joined in admiring, The maids of the east.

Shall we spin out our story And tell of the growd, Who atways were happy When speaking aloud, How our "Buck" aimed his blows, And never fell back, 'Till Judge Bradwell or Whitney

Came 'round on his track. No, no, let us stop, And just write a line, For the ladies, God bless them Who were right all the time; With volces in tone. And hearts ever warm,

They all cheered us onward, Through sunshine and storm.
